What's behind Measure P

By: Harriett Segel &, Raheem Hosseini, The Telegraph

Of the approximate 33,000 residents, the circa 18,150 registered voters within the proposed "city of El Dorado Hills" will be able to vote Nov. 8 on the following:

n (a) incorporation of El Dorado Hills (EDH) (Measure P), n (b) the City Council members initially 'elected at large' and (c) whether council members will be voted for 'by district' or 'at large' in the future (Measure Q).

Summary

El Dorado Local Agency Formation Commission approved the Resolution of Application on June 8.

The reasons for the incorporation include:

To enhance the physical character, community identity, and quality of life in El Dorado Hills (EDH) by more local control over more municipal services, land use planning and investment within the City.

To increase citizens' accessibility to local government officials and provide a local forum to enable residents to participate in civic affairs; To increase local responsibility for determining public service levels and providing capital improvements; To ensure the best allocation of state and federal funding to provide needed City services.

To consolidate responsibility for various city services and enable better access to additional state and federal funds to increase public service levels.

To allow for improved EDH public services for: (1) police protection; (2) fire protection and emergency medical services (EMS); (3) general health, safety and welfare by enforcing local laws and ordinances; (4) increase capacity and safety of local roads; (5) maintenance of existing roads; (6) parks, recreation facilities and programs; (7) assurance of adequate services and facilities to meet demands of all residents.

To enhance EDH development that promotes and preserves a blend of residential, agricultural, commercial, industrial and open space land uses.

To promote economic prosperity and fiscal independence through identification and implementing common economic goals.

What the proponents say (edhcity.org):

No new taxes.

Counties are more likely to seek tax hikes from voters.

The new city will have budget surpluses and higher service levels.

The new city's budget will be more than sufficient.

The county has largely planned our growth; we can manage it better.

Services like police protection will improve.

A city of El Dorado Hills will be better for affordable housing.

We'll have more money for fixing roads and improving traffic.

What the opponents say (saveedh.com):

Three hundred percent as many building permits as normal have to be issued to meet expenditure needs.

The city would have half the budget as neighboring cities for police services.

There is no budget to recover lost California Highway Patrol services, continue the current $12 million highway project or for affordable housing planning.

Revenue neutrality laws won't let the city retain any dollar from the current tax base. The county keeps all money.

$300,000 extra per year for wild fire protection is not counted in the budget.

No new services are outlined in the proposal.
